

Acknowledgements

We acknowledge gratefully the services and financial support of the following persons and institutions:

University of Winnipeg, Dean's Office
University of Winnipeg, Vice President Academic University of Winnipeg, Chair in Mennonite Studies
Dr. David Friesen Family Foundation, Winnipeg
Multiculturalism Secretariat, Ottawa
Loewen Foundation, Steinbach, MB
Mennonite Historical Society of Canada
Menno Simons College/Canadian Mennonite University
Martens Printing, Steinbach, MB
Jackie Benson, University of Winnipeg
David Rempel Smucker, Lancaster, Pennsylvania
Warren Schutz, University of Winnipeg
Centre for M.B. Studies, Winnipeg
Mennonite Heritage Centre, Winnipeg
Manitoba Mennonite Historical Society

We note that the Journal of Mennonite Studies is abstracted by America History and Life (ABC-CLIO), American Theological Library Association (ATLA) and Historical Abstracts.

Cover Illustration: "The Historic Doukhobor 1895 Arms Burning," black and white rendition of water colour painting by William Perehudoff, Saskatoon. "On Easter 1895 in Transcaucasia [between the Caspian and Black Seas] Matvey Lebedev and ten other Doukhobors threw down their guns while training in a local reserve battalion. They said that war and moral behaviour are incompatible. The result was that the dissidents were sent to a disciplinary battalion and exiled along with sixty other young men in active service who followed their example....[At] midnight June 28-29, 1895...7000 Doukhobors [followed and] simultaneously set ablaze their rifles, pistols and swords in the first mass protest in history against war and militarism." Text quoted from www.spirit-wrestlers.com; accessed 30 March 2007. This painting was first used in Koozma J. Tarasoff's Pictorial History of the Doukhobors (Saskatoon: Prairie Books Division, Modern Press, 1969). Used and altered from the original with permission from Koozma J. Tarasoff, who presented a paper on Canadian Doukhobor war resisters at the 'War and the Conscientious Objector' History Conference, University of Winnipeg, 20 and 21 October 2006.